

I Introduction

Alzheimer's disease, (AD), is a complex neurological disorder characterized by progressive cognitive decline and memory impairment. Scientifically, Alzheimer's disease is defined by the presence of specific pathological changes in the brain accumulation of abnormal protein deposits in the brain, including beta-amyloid plaques and tau tangles.. In terms of treatment, there is currently no cure for Alzheimer's disease. Available medications aim to manage symptoms and slow down the progression of the disease. These include cholinesterase inhibitors, such as donepezil, rivastigmine, and galantamine, which help improve cognitive function, and memantine, which regulates glutamate activity in the brain.

2 Stage of Alzheimer

Alzheimer's disease progresses through several stages, each characterized by specific symptoms and changes in cognitive function. The known stages are as follows:

1 - Mild Alzheimer's disease:

3 Stage 2

2_Moderate Alzheimer's disease:

3_Severe Alzheimer's disease: medical complications.

5

Pharmacists play a critical role in the management and care of individuals with Alzheimer's disease, both in the early stages and at the end of the disease. Here are some ways pharmacists can contribute:

In the early stages of Alzheimer's disease:

1. Medication management:
2. Education and guidance:
3. Commitment to taking medication:.
4. Collaborative care:

Towards the final stages of Alzheimer's disease:

1. Palliative care and symptom management:
2. End of life care:
3. Support for caregivers:
4. Communication and consultation:

4

Coping with Alzheimer's disease can be difficult for families, but there are strategies and techniques that can help make the situation more manageable.. Here are some suggestions:

1. Educate yourself:
2. Communication:
3. Establish routines:.
4. Providing a safe environment:
5. Encouraging independence:
6. Ask for support:
7. Take care of yourself:.
8. Planning for the

* References

- 1.Insert your text here. Change the font size to fit your text in the space.
- 2.Insert your text here. Change the font size to fit your text in the space.
- 3.Insert your text here. Change the font size to fit your text in the space.